

“An 18th-century story of love, sex, heartache, and hypocrisy.”

A beautiful young woman is condemned to death for a crime that she swears she did not commit. Inspired by true events in Connecticut in the 1750s, Gallows Road is told through the eyes of an indentured servant, Mercy Bramble. The mysterious death of her newborn puts Mercy's life in the hands of a jury while three ministers — and a group known as Children of God — all fight to save her soul.

Publication date: April 2, 2022

Historical Fiction, 280 pages, $18.95 USD
Publisher: Elm Grove Press
www.elmgrovepress.org info@elmgrovepress.org
Format: 5.5 x 8.5 Paperback
ISBN: 978-1-940863-16-0
Library of Congress CN: 2021952230

ELM GROVE

Distributed to the trade by:
Ingram Book Company
Also available through:
Amazon and Barnes & Noble
and local bookstores

“Traversing the same rocky footpaths as Nathaniel Hawthorne’s quintessential New England novel, The Scarlet Letter, Lisa Hall Brownell’s Gallows Road tells an early 18th-century story of love, sex, heartache, and hypocrisy. Yet Brownell’s Mercy Bramble is no opaque and respectful Hester Prynne. Mercy is a feisty, unschooled, and outspoken heroine who challenges the morals and mores of the staid, self-satisfied community that seeks to victimize her. I felt a near-magnetic pull into the pages of this humane, character-driven novel. I suspect you will, too.

— Wally Lamb, author of six N.Y. Times bestselling novels, including I Know This Much Is True and She’s Come Undone

“A well-crafted, emotionally satisfying historical novel.” — Kirkus Reviews

LISA HALL BROWNELL, a fiction writer and editor, believes that stories have the power to connect one person to another, and past to present. A former media director for Mystic Seaport Museum and director of publications for Connecticut College, Brownell edited an award-winning magazine. A native of New London, Conn., she graduated from Brown University, and earned an M.A. in English with a concentration in creative writing from San Francisco State University. Gallows Road is her first novel.

Photo by Kelley Norcia